He served in the Revolutionary Army during nearly or quite the whole war, the latter part of which as sergeant in the 5th Mass. Regiment. At the close of the war he received an honorable discharge, signed by Washington, bespeaking his worth and merit, after which he returned to Beverly, where he resided to the time of his death. He suffered much from rheumatism during the latter part of his life, probably brought on by exposure while in the army. He was a worthy man, and enjoyed the esteem of his friends and neighbors."
